The Colonel William C. Lambert Military Museum and Archive functions as a repository for historical artifacts and records of a military nature relating to the life of World War I ace William C. Lambert and all veterans of Lawrence County Ohio. Our mission is to document, preserve, and explain the role and legacy of these veterans who shaped our national experience so that citizens will understand the price of freedom and be inspired by their example.

The WCLMMA main goal is to preserve the militaria, artifacts and documents of the military history of our area. Specifically, but not limited to: the 91st Ohio Volunteer Infantry, raised at Camp Ironton in 1862; Colonel W.C. Lambert the second highest scoring American Ace in WWI, Company I, serving with distinction in the 37th Division at the Meuse Argonne Offensive; and Company K "The Iron Men of Metz", the Ohio National Guard Company formed at the Ironton Armory, serving in WWII and the first troops to enter Fortress Metz.

EXPERIENCE:

A visit to the William C. Lambert Museum and Archive is a rewarding experience where the collections are unique, the programs are engaging, and the exhibits are remarkable. Our museum offers safe and informal learning platforms that encourage visitors to imagine, explore, and experience Lawrence County's military and cultural heritage.

EDUCATE:

A visit will add depth to an individual's understanding of Lawrence County's military history and opens new worlds of interest while motivating visitors to contribute to their community in a positive way. The museum is designed to raise awareness about people, places, and subjects outside of our normal educational experience.

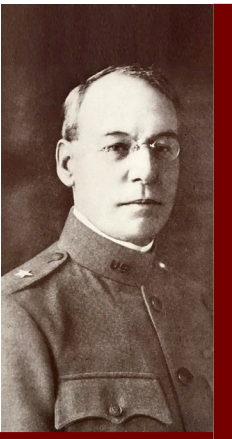

INSPIRE:

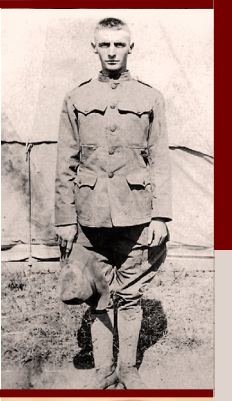

The museum's goal is to inspire learning and creativity while encouraging visitors to reflect on the past and realize the contemporary challenges currently facing our military and society. These learning objectives aim to increase the visitor's emotional involvement with the museum exhibits in hopes of achieving a genuine understanding of the military in American society.

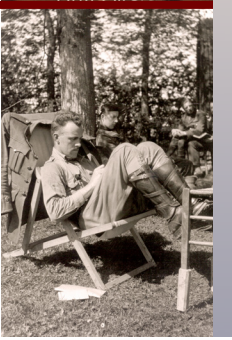

CHANGE:

Museums change people's lives! The William C. Lambert Museum and Archive is ambitious about its role in Lawrence County and partners with the local community to have a positive social impact as it enriches the skills and creativity of the local public.
